Subject: VERY COOL TOOL FOR SCHOOL SCIENCE PROJECTS

Dear Aquathin Dealer OnLine, Splash NewsBulletin and Allergic Reaction NewsBulletin Members;

A New Version of EnviroMapper is Now Available

For you parents that are "charmed" into assisting your kids with their school science projects, this very cool tool and site that will make your life easier, and earn you...er, I mean the children, excellent marks...absolutely speaking from experience!

EPA's Office of Water has just released a new version of EnviroMapper for Water (<http://www.epa.gov/waters/enviromapper/>). EnviroMapper for Water provides a Web-based mapping connection to a wealth of water data. You can use it to view and map data, such as the uses assigned to local waters by your state (fishing, swimming, etc), waters that are impaired and do not support their assigned uses, the reasons why waters are impaired, water quality monitoring information, closures of swimming beaches, and the location of dischargers. Maps can be viewed at the national, regional, state or local levels. This latest release of EnviroMapper for Water (Version 3.0) features several new layers of water data including EPA's national water quality database STORET, National Estuary Program study areas, and the location of nonpoint source projects. Other enhancements make it easier to locate and view these data, and instructions are included describing how to incorporate the resulting map into your own Web page. For more information, contact Tommy Dewald at dewald.tommy@epa.gov or 202-566-1178.

Feel free to consult with your local Authorized Aquathin Dealer for more information available to help with science projects.
